MOBILISING RESEARCH

Create positive change through research.

A Global Summer Program presented by
The Australian National University (ANU).

Sunday 25 June – Friday 14 July

This intensive, interdisciplinary Summer Program will equip you to put research into action and reset the agenda in favour of the public good.

Over three weeks you will live, learn and work with students from a wide range of disciplines and from around the globe. Your exposure to different mindsets, approaches, and cultural norms will challenge you to see the world the way others do.

You'll come to understand how opinions are formed and positions reached. You'll realise how interdisciplinary exchange can enable multiple, more robust solutions to future global threats.

Links between influence, implementation and creation will become clear through your examination of these topics:

- > the role research plays in shaping the public good
- > scholarship in and between the disciplines
- > ownership of knowledge for the public good
- > cultural perspectives on research in a globalised world
- > organisational implementation of research
- > mobilisation of research for the public good.

Program delivery

This is an intensive course, equivalent to a regular 6 unit, ANU course. A typical day will include a seminar with a world-leading researcher, a peer-run tutorial and an ANU research community event.

A key highlight will be a trip to the ANU Kioloa Campus where you will experience the stunning New South Wales south coast. You'll continue to work with your peers in a relaxed setting, learn about local Indigenous culture and environmental management practices, and explore the region's beautiful beaches and wildlife.

About ANU

Research is central to everything ANU does. Our focus on research as an asset, and an approach to education, ensures our graduates are in-demand the world-over for their abilities to understand, and apply vision and creativity to addressing complex contemporary challenges.

Studying abroad at ANU has been one of my life's greatest choices. Working with students from different academic fields and parts of the world allowed me to improve my team working skills. Moreover, the diverse environment in which we were in allowed me to see that we all have approaches to tasks and that our perspectives of the world are highly influenced on where we are from. Overall, if Mobilising Research had to be described in three words, I would choose: challenging, creativity, and community.
